This month, I am going to bring back some of the most popular Newsletter Tips that are still relevant today. Here are the golden oldies that still hold true:

#1: November, 2011 - Don't Hit That Reset Button!

It would seem that while troubleshooting connection issues pressing the reset button on your internet router is the same thing as rebooting your computer. Well, let it be known that "reset" is not the same as "reboot"! Reset will put your router settings back to the way it came from the factory – your custom settings will be lost.

#2: January 2015 – Wireless Router Settings

Speaking of setting your router back to the way it came from the factory, that usually means it will be the default wifi name, and probably no security settings, as most routers ship "open". This article describes how to put your WiFi name and Password back like it was.

#3: August 2009 – Power Busters

Saving energy is always a good thing. This newsletter got quite a few comments. If you still have an old CRT-style monitor (like an old TV), this article should motivate you to get rid of it and get a flat screen.

#4: October, 2010 – Top Three Tech Blunders of All Time

Oh, what could have been. Here are three companies that made huge blunders. All three of them survived, some better than others, but had they been more aware each could have been much more successful. Or, at least avoided egg on their faces.

#5: July, 2013 – Wacky Wireless Tales

The first two favorites deal with wireless and network issues... do you see a trend here? Wireless, although a fairly stable technology, is still barely out of its adolescence. Here are some tales of strange situations...
